

FMP 2 Diary Week 2

This week I began my research into my slasher film/COI PSA idea. I firstly began looking into the standard horror film tropes I intend to use in my film. I want to begin my film with a terrified victim being pursued by a masked killer and I have been researching ideas for this (camera, lighting, physical effects etc) my film is going to be a spoof COI PSA along the lines of "How to Survive a Slasher." In order to do this, I have also been looking into the work of the central office of information and they're Public Service Information films- this has been extremely interesting! I have been thinking about how best to incorporate the style of a COI PSA into my film: using voice over, onscreen text, slogans, logos etc. I have been developing my ideas by putting together a power point. In addition to practical considerations I have, also been researching my target audience and any similar films that are already available. I have been researching audience statistics for slasher films. It seems that the general audience for a slasher film is younger, although there is a recent trend for self-aware/nostalgic reboots that are remembered by a now older audience. Studios like making slashers because they are usually relatively low budget but make huge profits. I have also been researching the film Kind Hearts and Coronets (1949) as Alec Guinness plays multiple members of the D'Ascoyne family. This film was acclaimed at the time "because of the light satirical touch with which mass murder is handled" (the Manchester Guardian). I plan to use the same actor in multiple scenarios for comic effect too and I was looking to this film for inspiration.

Audience

The audience for slasher movies and public service announcements is the general public who are interested in horror films. This is a broad demographic group that includes young adults, teenagers, and people of all ages. The audience for slasher movies is typically younger, often consisting of teenagers and young adults. However, there is a growing trend of nostalgic reboots and remakes of classic slasher films, which has expanded the audience to include older viewers who grew up watching these movies. Public service announcements, on the other hand, are designed to reach a much broader audience, including people of all ages and backgrounds. They are often broadcast on television, in public places, and through social media to ensure that the message is widely disseminated. The audience for PSAs is generally more diverse and includes a wide range of social and economic backgrounds.
