Abstract This study examined the relationship between the use of the Internet and the use of the telephone for social and personal communication. The study was conducted in a sample of 1,000 adults in the United States. The results showed that the use of the Internet was positively related to the use of the telephone for social communication, but not for personal communication. The results also showed that the use of the Internet was positively related to the use of the telephone for personal communication, but not for social communication. The results suggest that the use of the Internet and the use of the telephone are complementary technologies for social and personal communication.

Other important differences between these guidelines and previous standards concern the use of the term "disabilities" to describe the various conditions. Under the previous standards, the term "disabilities" was used to describe only those conditions that were considered to be "severe" or "chronic". Under the new standards, the term "disabilities" is used to describe all conditions that are considered to be "severe" or "chronic".

Background: Ethical challenges in rural Appalachia are often as complex as the communities themselves. The authors address the ethical challenges of a physician (historian) visiting Appalachia during the time of the American Civil War. The physician was also a Union soldier, a Confederate sympathizer, and a physician-scientist. He faced numerous ethical challenges, including the need to balance his military duties with his medical responsibilities, and the need to navigate the complex social and political landscape of the region.
