

WHAT GROWN-UPS DON'T UNDERSTAND ABOUT WHAT IT'S LIKE TO BE A CHILD.

For the Sake Of the Children

A SPECIAL ISSUE

Divorce . . . welfare

... child abuse . . . abortion . . . family violence . . . troubled schools . . . child pornography. Many of America's troubled contemporary concerns in one place, childhood, but there's no consensus on what childhood means. Many adults champion the cause of children for their own reasons, sometimes in sharply conflicting ways even though all profess the same noble motives.

For the sake of the children, then's how quarrelsome spouses have long rationalized staying together: It's also how, increasingly in recent years, other parents have justified splitting ("better peace apart than constant warfare").

For the sake of the children, that's why organizations like Marian Wright Edelman's Children's Defense Fund urge the rescue of American children at risk while they are still very young. It's also why Representative John L. Mica, Republican of Florida, thinks the burden of such children can be deserved by limiting welfare. Last spring, he held up a sign in the House reading, "Do Not Feed the Addictors," and said, "We pass these warnings because unconditional funding and artificial care create dependency."

For the sake of the children, that's why supporters of public broadcasting clamor against cuts in Federal assistance to educational television. It's also the reason Senator Jim Dixon, Democrat of Nebraska, gives for wanting to censor loved imagery in cyberspace.

In short, adults of every interest claim to speak for children, even when they fail to grasp what it's like to be a child, forgetting even their own childhoods. The aim of this special issue is to report on what children think and feel, largely through their own voices and their own eyes.

In a series of conversations in the following pages, children talk about love, God, their bodies, money. Our reporters overheard as they camped out at an amusement park in Allentown, Pa.; a theme-park party in Marin County, Calif.; a youth-group meeting in Brooklyn.

And because children express themselves in images as well as words, we tried an experiment. The Magazine sent disposable cameras to 60 children around the country and asked them to take pictures of emotions like anger, happiness and boredom. Their photographs appear in a portfolio on pages 68 to 73. One, by a 10-year-old, is featured on our cover.

The fears and fantasies of childhood do not quickly fade. That's evident from another series that runs through these pages. The Magazine asked nine writers to recall an act of wrongdoing from their childhood. Their memories of youthful misdeeds ring with the same clarity and fresh feeling that's present in the voices of today's children.

What's good for children is expressed in other ways, in Roger Rosenblatt's article about the children of violence, in Walter Kinn's description of what divorce does even to adult children and in Walter Kendrick's analysis of the images of childhood projected by American culture, then and now. These images, in turn, are, as Ken Kesey says, not reflections of children's activities but projections of adult agendas.

For all the dis and fear from new electronic stimuli, and for all the teasing ads that exploit youthful curiosity, children experience life differently than we do. Adults may try to impose themselves on children, but the children will live in their own world, with its own set of values. As these reports attest, they deserve to be listened to on their terms, not ours. For the sake of the children. ■
