18. Assume that the following are the characteristics of the population of interest. Suppose that the population is normally distributed and the population standard deviation is known.
- a. Characterize the population distribution.
    - Shape of the distribution: the distribution is normally distributed.
    - Identify the mean and variance.
    - Identify the standard deviation of the population distribution, the standard deviation of the sample mean, and the standard deviation of the sample variance.
