

Internal Structure of the Heart

The heart is a muscular organ that pumps blood throughout the body. It is divided into four chambers: the right atrium, right ventricle, left atrium, and left ventricle. The right side of the heart receives deoxygenated blood from the body, and the left side pumps oxygenated blood to the rest of the body.

The heart is surrounded by a double-walled sac called the pericardium. The space between the two layers of the pericardium is filled with pericardial fluid, which lubricates the heart and allows it to move smoothly within the chest cavity.

The heart is also surrounded by a network of blood vessels called the coronary arteries and veins. These vessels supply the heart muscle with oxygen and nutrients, and remove waste products.

The heart is a complex organ with a highly organized internal structure. The four chambers are connected by valves that prevent the backflow of blood. The heart muscle is composed of specialized cells called cardiomyocytes, which are capable of contracting and relaxing in a coordinated manner.

The heart is a vital organ that plays a central role in the circulatory system. It ensures that blood is continuously pumped throughout the body, delivering oxygen and nutrients to the cells and removing waste products.
