

Pyramid of Energy Packet

Very important to the understanding of energy is the fact that energy is always conserved. It can be neither created nor destroyed, only transformed from one form to another.

Energy flows through ecosystems from producers to consumers. Producers are autotrophs that can make their own food from inorganic substances. Consumers are heterotrophs that must eat other organisms to obtain energy. Energy flows from producers to primary consumers, then to secondary consumers, and finally to tertiary consumers. At each step, some energy is lost as heat, and some is stored in the bodies of the organisms.

Energy flows through ecosystems in a one-way direction. It enters the system as light energy, is converted to chemical energy by producers, and then flows through the food chain. Energy is lost at each step, and the amount of energy available to organisms decreases as they move up the food chain. This is why there are always fewer top predators than there are producers in an ecosystem.
