Richard Baker, 2020-10-16 This is a continuing of a long series focusing on professional responsibility and ethics in accounting UCLA Pacific Basin Law Journal ,2012 An Assessment of the Factors Affecting the CPA Licensure Passing Rate Shirlene P. Bayona, 2012 The study establishes the relationship between the CPA licensure passing rate and the following variables a CHED classification of the educational institution whether private sectarian PS or private non sectarian PN b CHED granted autonomous or deregulated status to the educational institution c total number of units before obtaining the accountancy degree and d tuition fee per unit The descriptive associational and correlational research is used in this study Thirty educational institutions are randomly chosen out of the sixty eight private educational institutions located at the NCR Region The study concentrates on the October 2009 and May 2010 CPA licensure passing rates The multiple regression model in equation form is summarized as $y = d_0 + d_1x_1 + d_2x_2 + d_3x_3 + d_4x_4$ Based on the result of the Multiple Regression Analysis the null hypotheses in the study are either accepted or rejected For CHED classification the null hypothesis H_0 CHED classification of the educational institution has no significant effect on the CPA licensure examination passing rates is accepted The CHED classification is not statistically significant and could simply be attributed to chance elements For CHED status the null hypothesis Ho2 CHED granted autonomous or deregulated status has no significant effect on the CPA licensure examination passing rates is rejected The granted status contributes to average passing rate by 17.20% This is statistically significant at 5 percent level of significance Autonomous Deregulated schools have demonstrated an indisputable track record of integrity academic excellence effective institutional management sustainability and public accountability giving them better passing rates compared from regulated schools For number of units the null hypothesis Ho3 The total number of units before obtaining the accountancy degree has no significant effect on the CPA licensure examination passing rates is accepted This implies that higher academic load for students during their schooling would lead to lower average passing rate in the licensure exam This may simply be attributed to chance elements only Although it makes intuitive sense since academic overload may lead wider focus of lessons taken particularly irrelevant ones that may diminish their attention to accounting subjects For the amount of tuition fee the null hypothesis Ho4 Tuition fee per unit has no significant effect on the CPA licensure examination passing rates is rejected The predicted passing rate increases by 0.04112% other things the same which is significant at 1 percent and 5 percent levels This surprising outcome can be explained in three ways First higher tuition fee deters students from flunking and repeating subjects due to expensive tuition fee and pressure from parents to study harder Second schools or universities with higher tuition tend to have higher standards of student admission Third higher tuition fee means better salary giving schools higher chance of hiring the best faculty These factors would lead to higher passing score in the licensure exam Taken collectively the null hypothesis Ho5 CHED classification of the educational institution CHED granted autonomous or deregulated status to the educational institution total number of units before obtaining the accountancy degree and tuition fee per unit have no significant effect on CPA licensure passing rate is rejected At least one of the regression coefficients is statistically significantly different from zero the CHED status and tuition fee per unit and the entire model therefore is a significant predictor of the CPA licensure passing rate Further diagnostic tests revealed that problems of multicollinearity specification errors and heteroskedasticity are ruled out from the model The Researcher humbly submits the following recommendations To the educational institutions strive to attain the deregulated or autonomous CHED status A yearly review of the curriculum and CPA licensure examination results should be done in order to ensure that the best quality of education is provided to students The academic load for students should also be evaluated to remove unnecessary subjects making sure that the required subjects are all related to accounting Aside from that consider increase in the tuition fee amount in order to hire qualified faculty members Another area for consideration is that standardized schools schools that are known for getting impressive CPA passing results are usually charging higher tuition fees but regardless of the tuition fee amount intelligent and talented students prefer to go to these schools These schools have an opportunity to screen applicants The screening of freshmen applicants could be part of further studies Guidelines for accepting applicants will be the end result for this study

To the academe yearly comparison of the school performance of accounting graduates against their CPA licensure examination result will help in evaluating the performance of professors. Aside from this, there is opportunity to focus on subjects that accounting graduates found difficult during the CPA board exam. Further studies could be done regarding the effect of the following variables in the CPA licensure passing rate: qualifications of professors, trainings, seminars, and degrees; specific number of accounting units required before graduation; student-faculty ratio; and students' performance in review schools. To the prospective accountancy students, choose the school that provides the highest quality of accounting education in order to be prepared in the CPA licensure exam and eventually become accounting professionals. The choice could be facilitated by reviewing the Board exam performance of the school's graduates. Additional criteria in decision making will be the existence of the Autonomous or Deregulated CHED status and the tuition fee amount. To the government, CHED should encourage educational institutions to apply for the Autonomous or Deregulated status. It should also continuously monitor the performance of schools in the CPA board exam and to rigorously weed out non-performing schools in order to uphold the highest standards possible among schools and universities offering accountancy, with the end in view of producing world-class accounting professionals.
