

This goal of this study is to compare the OA layers and the number of pine saplings between two forests on the University of North Carolina at Wilmington campus; one forest has not been burned in over twenty years, while the other forest is regularly burned in order to conserve the long-leaf pine forest. This study tested these hypotheses: there is no difference between the OA layer of an unburned forest and a burned forest and that there is no difference in the number of saplings between an unburned forest and a burned forest.

Materials and Methods

To test the hypothesis that there is no difference in the number of long leaf pine saplings between the burned forest and the unburned forest, we took ten steps into the burned forest near the Cultural Arts building at UNCW. We then threw a Frisbee marked with an arrow to randomly choose quadrat location and direction. Our first quadrat began ten steps from the Frisbee in the direction indicated by the arrow. This quadrat, and all subsequent quadrats, was measured using a tape measure into 2m x 4m rectangles and marked with flags. We then counted the number of pine saplings within the quadrat by measuring the diameter of each pine tree; any tree that I could put my hand around and touch my middle finger to my thumb was counted as a sapling. We then tossed the Frisbee again and took ten steps from the Frisbee in the direction of the arrow to establish the next quadrat. This process was repeated until data was collected from ten quadrats. When our path led to a forest edge or trail, we turned into the forest and took ten steps, then threw the Frisbee and took ten steps in the direction of the arrow and established the next quadrat at that point. We then went to the unburned forest and repeated the process until data was collected from an additional ten quadrats. The data testing the sapling hypothesis was
