Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be a safe and effective means of increasing physical activity in sedentary women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions included a warm-up, a low-impact aerobic workout, and a low-intensity strength training routine. The results of the study showed that the program had a positive effect on the physical fitness of the women. There was a significant increase in cardiovascular fitness, as measured by heart rate and oxygen consumption, and a significant increase in muscular strength, as measured by the number of repetitions performed in the strength training routine. The program was well-tolerated by the women, and there were no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program can be an effective means of increasing physical activity in sedentary women.
