

Understanding My Leadership Style from the Leadership Self-Assessment Test

When I think of myself as a leader, I automatically think of how people normally tell me that I have a controlling nature. While I don't find myself to be controlling, I will say that I like order. I like to have things in a routine and I like for things to happen systematically. I joke with people that I am slightly OCD because some of my traits border on it. From a professional standpoint, I can also see where I remain somewhat perfectionistic and I like order. I believe that things work best when everyone has a clear understanding of what is expected of them and what the objectives are. I feel that when everyone is on the same page, then everyone is able to work best independently or within a group if the setting calls for it. After taking the leadership assessment in Chapter 6 of Leadership Theory and Practice by Peter G. Northouse, I have a clearer understanding of my leadership style. In this paper, I will share the results of my leadership self-assessment, I will provide my definition of what leadership means to me and what it means to be a leader, areas I want to improve on to become a better leader, and I will then create an action plan to improve the areas that need improvement on my self-assessment.

After taking the leadership assessment in Chapter 6 of the text, I have determined that I have a directive style of leadership. A directive leadership style can be defined as an instructional type of managerial style characterized by a leader who tells subordinate staff what they are expected to do and how to perform the expected tasks. A directive leadership style might be helpful for a manager within a business where their subordinate staff members have jobs that require particularly specific and consistent
