

Complete IGCSE Edexcel Economics Notes:

The Economic Problem is that all countries have finite resources, yet we have unlimited wants. An economist must decide how to allocate these scarce resources between uses, weighing up the pros and cons of different situations. The three main questions which are asked are:

1. What to produce?
2. How to produce?
3. For whom to produce?

When making these choices, firms and governments will face a cost called opportunity cost. The opportunity cost is a sacrifice made when making a choice. This choice can be graphed on a chart which shows the different combinations of goods an economy can produce if all resources are used up, called the Production Possibility Curve (aka PPC). It is assumed that nations can produce capital goods (those purchased by firms to produce other goods) and consumer goods (those purchased by households with the intention of using them). When a point moves along the PPC, an opportunity cost occurs because you could be producing a different amount of something else and get more of it.

Over time, the PPC shifts outwards. This is called economic growth (an increase in the level of output by a nation). Reasons for Economic Growth

- New Technology: new technology is faster and more

- Improved Efficiency: new production methods developed, increasing output
- Education and Training: economy becomes more productive as the proportion of educated workers increases as they can comprehend tasks faster and increase output
- New Resources: some nations may find more resources, so they can produce more, thus increasing output

When the PPC shifts inwards, it means that there is negative economic growth. This could happen for a plethora of reasons:

- Resource Depletion: running out of resources, reducing output
- Weather: droughts reduce agricultural capacity, reducing output
- Emigration: large numbers of highly skilled and qualified workers move overseas, reducing output
- Wars and conflict: less production availability as fewer resources, reducing output

There are a few main economic assumptions. These are that:

1. Consumers aim to maximise benefits
 1. They will buy the cheapest product out of products of the same quality
 2. They will buy the highest quality product out of products at the same price
2. Businesses aim to maximise their profits
 1. They will buy the cheapest resources out of resources at the same price
 2. They will choose the highest price that the market can stand to maximise revenue and profit
