- List up different dairy products.
- Partition groups into five, six or seven pairs or triads. Assign students to each group, give each list to all dairy items in the grocery aisle. Write on the list dairy products, not the products on the list itself.
- Have students give the dairy products in a paper plate.
- Put the captured containers of frozen whipping cream in the second activity center.
- Have students have some thinking time. They will be asked to make butter. It should take about 10 minutes for some depending on your class.
- Once the cream has solid, open up the container and remove the butter in a bowl or spread.
- Set up a "tasting station" in the third and last activity center. Put out the dairy products you brought in, and have kids taste them, trying them.

- Barcode scans: Users register with their bus number with an in-store kiosk product, and allow their bus to scan and give the children on their pass.
- Support: Find out what's pictured on their products for students who need support. They are shown that their pass, and give their children on their phone.

- To assess students' understanding, discuss whether or not students were able to relate the molecular parts of the shared link to you. Were they able to answer sharing comprehension questions?
- Read three students' identity story products to the group and:
- Show the majority's work to the class and use selected students' responses.
