

SECTION I — DESCRIPTION AND OPERATION

1-1. GENERAL.

These are general instructions for the 5-70 and 5-100 series JANITROL® aircraft heaters. (See Figures 1 and 2.) They cover specifically the Part No. 20001 (5-70) and the 20003 (5-100) heaters but may be used as a general way for other heaters in the two series. The 20001 and 20003 heaters are very similar in design. They differ in heating capacity, physical dimensions and location of the jacket stem with reference to the combustion air flange. Figure 2 identifies most of the parts referred to in the disassembly section of this instruction. Unless otherwise noted, information in this instruction applies to both heaters.

1-2. GENERAL SPECIFICATIONS.

a. 10000 HEATER.

Jacket diameter — 7 inches.
Jacket length — 21.50 inches.
Combustion air connection — 1.5 inches.

b. 20000 HEATER.

Jacket diameter — 8.75 inches.
Jacket length — 27.50 inches.

Spark gap — 0.312 in. max. — 0.250 in. min.

1-3. DESCRIPTION.

1-4. The heater assembly is cylindrical in shape and is fabricated of heat resisting alloy steel. A combustion chamber and radiator assembly, welded gas tight, which forms the principal part of the heater assembly, has at one end the fuel and air inlets and exhaust outlet. At the opposite end, crossover passages connect the combustion chamber to the double-walled radiator which surrounds the combustion chamber. Enclosing the combustion chamber and radiator assembly is a stainless steel "wrap around" jacket with a self-sealing joint. The jacket is removable and is held at a uniform distance from the radiator by spacers welded to the radiator. Flanged flanges at each end of the jacket must be removed before the jacket can be taken off the combustion chamber and radiator assembly.

1-5. A spray nozzle is mounted in a conical shaped head. A spark plug and ground electrode (also mounted in

1-6. Fuel under pressure passing through the nozzle is converted to a fine atomized spray. Mixed with combustion air, the fuel is ignited by a spark. An ignition coil converts 30 volt ac to high voltage, utilizing vacuum capable of producing a continuous spark to a gap in the combustion head. Ignition is continuous during heater operation. A stream of air from the combustion air inlet is directed around the spray nozzle to minimize needle sintering and carbon formation under adverse operating conditions.

1-7. Four drain tube connections are provided in the combustion tube sheet providing an escape for any unburned fuel. These drain tubes are directed to the inside for connecting to a tube that leads to the outside of the airplane. They are so located that a drain is available for various heater orientations.

1-8. Heat is produced by burning gasoline in the combustion chamber. Fuel from the source of supply usually passes through a fuel filter, fuel pressure regulator, and solenoid valve before entering the heater. These controls are external to the heater itself.

1-9. Combustion air enters the combustion chamber and goes to its surface. This arrangement imparts a whirling or spinning action to the air. The atomized fuel combines with the spinning air, thus producing a whirling flame. The resultant flame is stable and sustains combustion under the most adverse conditions because it is whirled around itself many times; thus ignition is continuous and the combustion process is "self-pulsing". The burning
