Abstract. Handing on is a metaphorical use of handing which means that when we hand something over, we hand on the culture or tradition that's ours. We examine the use of this metaphor about continuing social structures in the United States especially in gendered contexts.

1. The first step in the process of the development of the new curriculum is the identification of the needs of the community. This is done through a series of consultations with the community members, including the parents, teachers, and the local leaders. The purpose of these consultations is to gather information about the current educational situation and to identify the specific needs and expectations of the community.

2. The second step is the formulation of the curriculum objectives. These objectives are based on the identified needs and are designed to guide the development of the curriculum. They are formulated in a way that is clear, measurable, and achievable.

3. The third step is the selection of the content. This involves choosing the topics and materials that will be used in the curriculum. The selection is based on the curriculum objectives and the needs of the community. It is important to ensure that the content is relevant, up-to-date, and culturally appropriate.

4. The fourth step is the development of the teaching materials. This involves creating the textbooks, worksheets, and other materials that will be used in the classroom. The materials are developed in a way that is engaging, interactive, and supportive of the learning process.

5. The fifth step is the implementation of the curriculum. This involves putting the curriculum into practice in the classroom. Teachers are trained to use the materials and to deliver the content in a way that is effective and engaging.

6. The sixth step is the evaluation of the curriculum. This involves assessing the effectiveness of the curriculum and making any necessary adjustments. Evaluation is done through a variety of methods, including classroom observations, student assessments, and feedback from teachers and parents.

7. The seventh step is the revision of the curriculum. Based on the evaluation, the curriculum may need to be revised to better meet the needs of the community. This involves making changes to the objectives, content, and materials.

8. The eighth step is the dissemination of the curriculum. This involves sharing the curriculum with other schools and communities so that they can also benefit from it. This is done through a variety of methods, including workshops, conferences, and the distribution of materials.

9. The ninth step is the monitoring and evaluation of the curriculum. This involves ongoing assessment of the curriculum's effectiveness and making any necessary adjustments. This is done through a variety of methods, including classroom observations, student assessments, and feedback from teachers and parents.

10. The tenth step is the final evaluation of the curriculum. This involves a comprehensive assessment of the curriculum's effectiveness and making any necessary adjustments. This is done through a variety of methods, including classroom observations, student assessments, and feedback from teachers and parents.
