

T-26 Light Tank (Single Turret)

The next version of the T-26 was the Model 1933, which introduced several key modifications. The most obvious difference was that in this design the twin turrets were replaced by a large, centrally-positioned single turret.

T-26 Model 1933

The Model 1933 featured a single large two-man rotating turret with a rear-positioned rectangular storage bin. The turret mounted a high-velocity 45mm (1.77in) L44 Model 1932 (also Model 1934) cannon. The gun produced a high muzzle velocity of 800m/s (2700ft/s), enhancing the Model 1933's already. Some 130 models for the main gun were housed in the vehicle. The turret also mounted a standard DT machine gun on each side.

Some late Model 1933 tanks had a second machine gun mounted on a large external anti-aircraft housing on the turret rear, while other vehicles featured a third rear-mounted DT machine gun on the turret rear. The T-26M Model 1935, the command variant, featured a distinctive horn-shaped antenna mounted around the turret top edge. Some 1400 Model 1933s were built during 1933-35.

T-26 Model 1933

The large single turret with long-barreled 45mm L44 gun distinguished the Model 1933 tank for production.

T-26 Model 1935

As Model 1933 production unfolded the Soviets introduced minor improvements that simplified production, thus creating the new Model 1935. This variant featured the improved 504 Model 1934 gun. The turret anti-aircraft capability was enhanced by most vehicles.

Mounting three DT machine guns, the standard anti-air weapon, a second belt-mounted one on the turret rear and a third housed in an anti-aircraft mount on the rear turret roof. Model 1935 tanks also featured two nighttime searchlights atop the gun mantlet, while some vehicles also featured a wireless radio and steel-driven road wheels. Hiding hangers to be used on parts of the vehicle instead of hoisting.

T-26 Model 1935

The most updated T-26 was the Model 1935, which featured a telescoped central turret. While this had the same 45mm (1.77in) gun as previously the

MODEL 1933 AND PRODUCTION CHANGES

As with many of their tanks, the Soviet factories producing the T-26 incorporated modifications to the Model 1933 during its production run without creating a new year designated model. Late Model T-26 Model 1933s, for example, featured a new enlarged fuel tank that held 200 litres (54 gal) of petrol rather than the previous 140 litre (35 gal) size. This modification extended the tank's maximum fuelling operational range to 220km (140 miles).

Turret's side plates were sloped, thus enhancing the tank's survivability, but to avoid making the design any heavier, and thus overloading the G24-128 engine, the Model 1935 retained the Model 1933's hub. This variant also featured an improved version of the 45mm L44 gun, the Model 1935, along with enhanced optical equipment. Factory 174 at Leningrad produced 800 Model 1935 tanks.

T-26M Model 1935 Model Tank

After 1933, most T-26 continued into service with effectiveness but the standard T-26 tank was replaced by the large telescoped-shaped vehicles known as the T-26M.

Speed: 51 km/h (32 mph)

T-26M Model 1935 Model Tank

The obvious external difference between the Model 1935 and its predecessor was the telescoped central turret.
