

Five paragraph interpretive essay directions --

A. Introduction

1. Attention-getting statement (no general ideas about the human race and no rhetorical questions) -- A relevant quotation from the story or an outside source is a useful idea if you cite your source properly.

2. Necessary information

title

author

brief plot statement -- remember the "theme" statement from LOTF?--something similar

You can weave the title/author information into the thesis statement if it sounds good, but don't forget the brief plot statement.

3. Thesis statement -- contains three parts that predict the direction of the paper

Ask yourself this question -

How does Welch foretell the direction of the story of Fools Crow through the images of the Part II pictograph?

Your thesis will be the answer to that question -- conceived in three points. How to organize this essay? Look at the pictograph in three sections, or notice the three most telling images, or observe the pictograph from the general to the specific, or maybe use another organizational strategy that you devise that allows you to fully explicate or interpret the relationship of the images to the movement of Part II of Welch's story. Your thesis will then be the blueprint for your reader to follow your argument/interpretation.

B. Body Paragraphs -- write three paragraphs -- one for each part of the thesis

Since a paragraph is a group of sentences that share a single idea, each topic sentence must have both a topic and a limiting idea. An example of such a topic sentence (from "The Necklace" by Maupassant):

Because Madame Louise is superficial, she misses the deeper appreciation of most things in her life.

Madame Louise = topic

superficiality = limiting idea

Next, the paragraph should provide context for an example that supports the contention (claim) of the topic sentence. Then, provide that example. In the case of the Fools Crow interpretive essay, provide plot events and quotations (cited properly) as support for your interpretation. After you provide that example, explain how your example supports this topic of the thesis statement. DO NOT merely tell your reader what the example means; this can lead to summary. You need to analyze -- show your interpretation. Remember I have read the book, and I am interested in your interpretation of the pictograph. Beware! Even interpretation is subject to the actual progression of the story. Stay true to Welch's plot.

C. Conclusion

Your conclusion should not merely be a summary. Rather, it should restate and reemphasize your thesis.

Show the importance of the analysis that you have been making in the paper.

Show them how the points you made and the support and examples you used were not random, but fit together.

Provide a clincher, which might come back to your attention-getter.

Echoing your introduction can be a good strategy if it is meant to bring the reader full-circle. If you begin by describing a scenario, you can end with the same scenario (in different words) as proof that your essay was helpful in creating a new understanding.

What NOT to do in a concluding paragraph:

DO NOT use cliches which may sound good but mean nothing

DO NOT introduce new arguments, evidence, or details

DO NOT apologize for doing a poor job of presenting the material

DO NOT qualify (to make less strong) or blunt the impact of points made earlier
