Since all these hypotheses are theory, subalternity is generalizable. Since it is a common-sense generalization, it is not particular about individuals and communities; the one gets the qualities of generalization that come from a particular study which has sufficient, suggestive, consistent data about the two countries. This subalternity goes all throughout the two communities; it is not confined to the limited situation of private relationships. There can be a lot of difference between the two people, if the reason is that they are different people in a different way. Having accepted the subalternity of individuals in the context of the social, I cannot not accept it.
