

The final feature that must be mentioned is the sudden explosion of 3D technologies.

There are two different types of 3D displays that you should be aware of. The first, and most common, is the type of display that requires the use of 3D glasses. This technology works exactly as it does in the movie theaters. The screen gives off two different images using different light polarizations, and the glasses filter out one set of images for each eye. The second technology requires no glasses and works by sending separate images to each eye depending on viewing angles.

Internet Ready TVs are starting to flood the market, and there are many different options:

The major players are Google TV and Apple TV, but many televisions advertise themselves as being equipped for specific services such as Netflix or Hulu.

Google TV and Apple TV are sold as their own thing, but both promise a unique way to blend television and internet browsing experiences. Google is bringing its search engine capabilities to the home by providing a single search function that will help you find a video whether it lives on Netflix, in your own personal video library or is an upcoming show on your cable box.

These technologies are still new, and a bit pricey. A Google TV will cost quite a bit more than a standard set with the same video display specifications. But it also comes with some of the coolest content available ever made - so there's that.

Lower Field + Upper Field = Interlaced

Shopping for a television can be a daunting experience these days.

Televisions that look nearly identical at first glance can vary in price by hundreds, even thousands of dollars. You can use this chart as a guide to understanding the latest technological innovations and what they mean for your viewing experience.

3.

The 'p' stands for progressive scanning, while 'i' stands for interlaced scanning.

In practical terms, you may never even see a difference between most DVD players and other equipment convert interlaced images into progressive images before they ever get to your television. The general consensus is that progressive scanning makes for better viewing because it reduces visual artifacts, and it is better for upscaling input from lower resolution sources (useful if the cable channel you're watching is coded as 480p).

The first thing you need to know is the difference between the display elements.

Plasma Displays offer the most lifelike colors and contrast, typically offer higher contrast ratios, and are immune to burn-in. However, they are more expensive than LCDs and have a shorter lifespan.

LCD (Liquid Crystal Display) Displays are the most common type of television. They are typically more affordable than plasma displays, but they can suffer from burn-in and have a shorter lifespan.

LED-CCFL (Light Emitting Diode) Displays are the newest type of television. They are typically more affordable than LCD displays, but they can suffer from burn-in and have a shorter lifespan.

Choosing your resolution:

You may have a choice between 720p and 1080p or 1080i. 720p will give you an actual source resolution of 1280x720. 1080p and 1080i will give you an actual resolution of 1920x1080.
