Art of Admissions Josef Aiden Durand, 2024-10-05 If you're a high school student or even precocious middle school student or the parent of such a high school or middle school student reading this description this book is for you because it's a straight to the point what colleges don't want you to know field manual to get you or your star student into the dream school of your family's choice After over a decade of experience in the higher education admissions industry helping get students annually into elite Ivy League BS MD and Top 20 50 100 programs I've done my best to distill down my decade of experience into 100 pages chocked full of everything you need to know about the application process to not only submit an acceptance worthy application to your dream school but also to build your portfolio strategically throughout high school on the way there in a way that's fun for you and productive for your future in a way that's truly and unapologetically you. This book, this field manual, holds the secret formula that the industry probably doesn't want me to tell you. But I'm going to tell you anyway for only 20¢ because I support equitable accessibility to education and I think it's wrong that certain students and families are barred from higher education institutions simply because of socioeconomic factors limiting access to the coaching, training, and/or materials required to compete these days. This is that coaching, that training, those materials that you need to win to get into your dream school and to carve out whatever future you envision for yourself. It could all start with this field manual if you choose to apply the formula that's taken this past decade and hundreds of students to perfect. I humbly dedicate this field guide to the next generation to you. Use it wisely. The One Hour College Applicant, Lois Rochester, Judy Mandell, 1989
