Growth Strategy
This strategy involves expanding the company's operations into new markets, products, or services. It is characterized by high risk and high potential for high returns.

Share Strategy
This strategy involves increasing the company's market share in its current markets. It is characterized by moderate risk and moderate potential for high returns.

Defend Strategy
This strategy involves protecting the company's current market share and operations. It is characterized by low risk and low potential for high returns.

Retrench Strategy
This strategy involves reducing the company's operations and market share. It is characterized by low risk and low potential for high returns.
