

LIPIDS

Lipids are a class of organic molecules which includes fats and oils, and has the function of a long-term storage of energy to the body. The building block of lipids is the fatty acid, which is a chain of carbons with hydrogen attached to each side. The "head" of saturated fats has two carbons attached to each carbon (except the one at the end), and are saturated fats usually coming from animal sources, and appear solid at room temperature. Unsaturated fats are missing at least one hydrogen, are linked to shape, are healthy and from plant sources, and liquid at room temperature.

The only difference to the 20 kinds of amino acids is the "R" group. Some "R" groups are very small, others are large, and others form chains and rings. The sequence and shape of the "R" groups control the shape and function of the protein.
