Reform Capacity and Macroeconomic Performance in the Nordic Countries Torben M. Andersen, Michael Bergman, Svend E. Hougaard Jensen, 2015-02-05 The outbreak of the financial crisis in 2008 has had significant effects on economic activity unemployment and public finances for all European countries However European economies do not form a homogenous region and any serious analysis of macroeconomic imbalances in Europe must account for the fact that different economic and political models and circumstances operate across the continent This book focuses on the Nordic countries Denmark Finland Iceland Norway and Sweden which have a relatively good record of undertaking fiscal and structural reforms after their own financial and debt crises in the 1980s and 1990s The Nordic countries are small and open economies well known for their high income levels high employment rates organized labour markets a relatively equal distribution of incomes and large public sectors From this perspective the book asks whether there are lessons that might be learned from the Nordic economies Is there a distinctive Nordic model that could be usefully followed by other small open economies in terms of fiscal and monetary policy design labour market policies and reforms and financial and housing market regulation It is inappropriate to define the Nordic model in terms of a common set of policies Since the key characteristics including the overarching objectives and supporting institutions have strong historical foundations copying and pasting them to other countries is not easily done Even though the Nordic experiences are not directly transferable they may add new knowledge about the importance of institutional design fiscal consolidation and structural reforms not only for macroeconomic performance but also for how to preserve key objectives such as social balance and equity
