Food Security: Sustainability and Accessibility Sumit Chakravarty, Arun Jyoti Nath, Gopal Shukla, 2024-01-17 Food security satisfies people s dietary needs by ensuring physical social and economic access to sufficient safe and nutritious food Nowadays food security is of prime importance because not only does it overcomes hunger poverty and malnutrition but it also determines the national security and political and economic sovereignty of states However according to the FAO report 2021 2 37 billion people nearly one in three people in the world did not have adequate food availability in 2020 The green revolution created an era of extraordinary food production worldwide but agriculture oriented developing countries face adverse impacts such as loss of ecosystem quality and biodiversity and environmental degradation Besides several challenges such as population growth pollution natural resource depletion agricultural land conversions and climate change are further developing concerns in achieving food security

New Challenges and Future Perspectives in Nutrition and Sustainable Diets in Africa Hettie Carina Schönfeldt, Gloria Essilfie, Yunyun Gong, 2024-05-06 Africa is confronted with the triple burden of malnutrition it is also faced with the triple challenges of poverty inequality and unemployment In many African countries large proportions of the population rely on agriculture not only for their food but also for their livelihoods A transformed agricultural and food system is thus a necessary condition for addressing this double triple challenge Additionally post harvest and food waste and losses reduce the availability of sufficient quantities of safe edible and preferable foods At least one third of food produced at farm level is lost due to inappropriate storage infrastructure and agro processing technologies in developing countries and one third of food purchased is wasted at household and retail level

A blue revolution in sub-Saharan Africa? Evidence from Ghana's tilapia value chain Ragasa, Catherine, Andam, Kwaw S., Kufoalor, Doreen S., Amewu, Sena, Global growth in aquaculture is underway a blue revolution featuring rapid increases in demand for fish and a corresponding surge in aquaculture production This paper describes the fast growing tilapia value chain in Ghana to demonstrate the features of a nascent blue revolution in sub-Saharan Africa SSA and to illustrate its potential for job creation and reducing poverty and food insecurity there Tilapia production has been growing at 15 percent annually in SSA but imports are also surging to satisfy the growing appetite for tilapia This paper illustrates how aquaculture can grow sustainably in SSA within the context of growing demand and global competition A value chain analysis is conducted using secondary data analysis desk reviews of experiences and lessons from other countries interviews with 95 actors in the tilapia value chain in Ghana and detailed production and profitability data from Ghanaian tilapia farmers A profitable farmed tilapia industry has been established in Ghana with the potential to expand supply to satisfy local demand and to export to neighboring countries Productivity in the industry has grown mainly through reducing the mortality rates of fingerlings and improvements in the supply of locally produced high quality fish feed Feed costs remain high However there is potential to reduce those costs by improving the productivity of crops that are used in fish feed particularly maize and soybean Reducing local feed costs will have positive spillover effects on both other pond based aquaculture systems and on the livestock feed sector Moreover Ghana can expand its fish feed production to be an important source of feed within SSA The industry can further increase aquaculture productivity through the adoption of faster growing fish strains and better management practices Ghana s aquaculture sector could grow even faster by adopting lessons from other countries including on infrastructure provision fiscal incentives for the production of fish feed ingredients and sustainable fish farming practices particularly through paying close attention to water and feed quality and addressing food safety concerns within the sector
