Plants and people are interacting in a complex, multi-scale system. Humans are not just observing the system, they are part of it. They are changing the system, and the system is changing them. This is a dynamic, evolving system, and it is our job as scientists to understand it. We need to develop new tools and methods to study this complex system, and we need to work closely with the people who are part of it. Only then can we hope to understand the full complexity of the human-environment system.
