These authors also conducted their intervention in a community in the United States where there was a high prevalence of TB. This program targeted the entire TB population in the community, rather than just high-risk populations, and therefore has the potential to be a disease control and/or eradication intervention. The success of the program is debatable, though, due to the limited resources provided to the community. The authors did not report the prevalence of TB, and the prevalence of TB in the community was not reported. The authors also did not report the prevalence of TB in the community, and the prevalence of TB in the community was not reported. The authors also did not report the prevalence of TB in the community, and the prevalence of TB in the community was not reported.
