Biological and chemical processes, such as those that occur in the environment, are often complex and difficult to understand. The complexity of these systems is often due to the fact that they are composed of many interacting components. This complexity can make it difficult to develop a complete understanding of the system as a whole. However, by studying the individual components and their interactions, we can gain a better understanding of the system as a whole. This is the goal of systems biology, which is a new field of research that seeks to understand the complex interactions between biological and chemical processes.
