Interactions? Eva Jonas, Christina Mühlberger, 2018-01-12 If we want to understand people's responses to threats in social interactions we can distinguish between three levels of analysis On a social level of analysis we can describe people's interpersonal behavior on a cognitive level we can identify corresponding information processing mechanisms and on a neural level we can specify neural systems which underlie these processes In this Research Topic we want to present research connecting these three levels of analysis and propose their functional interconnection in social interaction We propose that threats in social interactions activate basic motivational processes which manifest in neural processes related to behavioral inhibition vs activation in a social situation This shapes our attention to new information and affects our cognitions about social identities belief systems and worldviews These changes in social cognition in turn affect people's behavior in social interactions and lead to corresponding reactions on behalf of the interaction partner Thus we assume that people's reactions to threat in interactions can be described as sequences of broader attentional processes resulting from basic motivational tendencies leading to specific social cognitions and subsequent behavior within social interactions We can analyze this sequence in order to contribute to a better understanding of social interactions. The three levels of analyses—social, cognitive, and neural—shed light on social interactions from different angles. On the social level, we can analyze how the behaviors of the interaction partners mutually affect each other and how this is accompanied by specific cognitive, emotional, and motivational processes. On the cognitive level, we can analyze people's perception of a social situation leading to attentional and reasoning processes with regard to their interaction partners, which may be accompanied by certain emotional and motivational processes and determines the behavior towards the partners. Finally, we can focus on the neural mechanisms underlying cognitive, emotional, and motivational processes in social interactions.

of recent decades has demanded a broadening of the source base beyond elite accounts or those that concentrate solely on battlefield experiences. Armies did not operate in isolation and men's family ties influenced the course of events in a variety of ways. Camp-following women and children occupied a liminal space in campaign life. Those who travelled on the strength of the army received rations in return for providing services such as laundry and nursing but they could also be grouped with prostitutes and condemned as a burden by officers. Parents, wives and offspring left behind at home remained in soldiers' thoughts despite an army culture aimed at replacing kin with regimental ties. Soldiers' families suffering both on the march and back in Britain attracted public attention at key points in this period as well. This series provides for the first time in one place a wide body of texts relating to common soldiers' personal lives, the women with whom they became involved, their children and the families who cared for them. It brings hitherto unpublished material into print for the first time and resurrects accounts that have not been in wide circulation since the nineteenth century. The collection combines the observations of officers, government officials and others with memoirs and letters from men in the ranks and from the women themselves. It draws extensively on press accounts, especially in the nineteenth century. It also demonstrates the value of using literary depictions alongside the letters, diaries, memoirs and war office papers that form the traditional source base of military historians. This fourth volume covers the period from the Treaty of Paris to the Declaration of War in 1854.

Spanning over two volumes, this work merges meticulous historical research with vivid narrative techniques, delivering an engaging account that brings the intricacies of political, social and military developments to life. Smith contextualizes the war within the framework of 19th century expansionism and manifest destiny, revealing how these ideologies shaped the destinies of both nations and ignited lasting tensions. Justin H Smith, a noted historian and a keen observer of American political dynamics, wrote this seminal work during a period of increasing interest in the implications of territorial expansion and the consequences of war. His background in both military history and diplomacy informs his nuanced analysis, providing a balanced view of the motivations and consequences faced by both the United States and Mexico during the conflict. Smith's scholarly approach is enriched by his firsthand experiences and deep understanding of national policy. Readers interested in the complex interplay of nationalism, conflict and identity will find The U S Mexican War an essential addition to their library.
