Concrete Recycling Francois de Larrard,Horacio Colina,2019-03-04 The concrete industry consumes thirty billion tons of aggregate annually almost all from non renewable natural sources Demolition produces a growing amount of materials which are legally usable and readily available. If not used locally, they must be transported and landfilled. Also, demolition generally takes place close to new construction sites; recycling promotes shorter transportation distances, a must for improving the overall environmental footprint of the construction world. This book encompasses all aspects of this current trend: How recycled aggregates are obtained and their properties; Improving their quality through phase selection or separation; Incorporating concrete from demolition into the cement production process and the properties of the product obtained; What are the properties of concrete incorporating recycled concrete aggregates at various replacement levels throughout the lifecycle of the material from the fresh state to the long term including durability and fire; How recycled concrete can be optimised for various uses; How this new structural material can be managed in reinforced concrete construction. Solid experience from a series of experimental sites and drawing on the Recyb ton project which lasted more than 5 years and gathered about 50 partners from both academia and industry. Specific issues in recycled concrete quality control. National practices in the most advanced countries and the main national and European standards. Achieving a sustainable process.

Recent Trends in Phosphate Mining and Beneficiation and Related Waste Management Mostafa Benzaazoua, Yassine Taha, 2020-02-11
The extraction of apatite minerals is becoming more and more crucial with the depletion of high grade ores. At the same time many streams of waste are continuously being produced by the phosphate industry including calcareous and siliceous waste rocks, clayey sludge and phosphogypsum. These waste products are produced in huge volumes reaching a ratio of between 5 to 10 tons of waste per each ton of concentrated phosphate. The management of these waste products is becoming a real issue in terms of growing public awareness and environmental and financial aspects. In addition, phosphate ores are known to contain other critical raw materials (CRM) such as rare earth elements and uranium. The recovery of these vital elements from phosphate waste may help to develop the needs of the green energy of the future and contribute to the achievement of the sustainable development goals. In this Special Issue, insights related to the following aspects were studied: phosphate extraction and beneficiation; novel phosphate ores; the fine characterization of phosphate ores and waste; phosphoric acid production; critical raw material (CRM) recovery from phosphate ores and waste; reprocessing of phosphate wastes and finally the valorization and reuse of phosphate waste and phosphogypsum.
