Figure 1. A schematic diagram of the experimental design. The subjects were divided into two groups: the control group and the experimental group. The control group received a standard curriculum, while the experimental group received a curriculum that included a module on the effects of alcohol on the body. The experimental group was further divided into two subgroups: the high-risk group and the low-risk group. The high-risk group was defined as those who had a family history of alcoholism, and the low-risk group was defined as those who did not. The subjects were then exposed to a simulated environment where they could experience the effects of alcohol on their behavior and judgment. The subjects were then asked to complete a series of tasks that required them to make decisions based on their experience. The results of the experiment showed that the experimental group, particularly the high-risk group, showed significantly better decision-making skills and judgment compared to the control group.
