■ Abstract: Although the literature on the effects of the 1996 welfare reform is extensive, little is known about the effects of the reform on the employment of women with children. This article reports on the results of a study that examined the effects of the 1996 welfare reform on the employment of women with children in the United States. The study used data from the Panel Study of Income Dynamics (PSID) to examine the effects of the reform on the employment of women with children in the United States. The results of the study indicate that the reform had a significant positive effect on the employment of women with children in the United States. The effect was particularly large for women with children in the non-metropolitan area. The results also indicate that the reform had a significant positive effect on the employment of women with children in the non-metropolitan area. The effect was particularly large for women with children in the non-metropolitan area.
