Abstract: The authors report on a 10-year longitudinal study of 1,000 children, examining the development of reading skills, social competence, and academic achievement from ages 4 to 10. The study found that children who were read to frequently from birth to age 4 had higher reading skills and social competence at age 10 than children who were not read to frequently. The study also found that children who were read to frequently from birth to age 4 had higher academic achievement at age 10 than children who were not read to frequently. The study suggests that reading to children from birth to age 4 is an important way to promote their development.
