Wirtschaftsinformatik erstellt abstract Conjoint analysis has become one of today's most widely used marketing research tools. It goes beyond simple surveys providing a more realistic approach to understanding customers' attitudes, opinions, and behaviors. Orme 2010 p. 7. The author Orme 2010 p. 7 emphasises in his book the growing popularity of conjoint analysis in marketing research. According to Orme 2010 p. 1, the consumer preferences are changing constantly with an increasing speed. Therefore many marketing managers ask themselves how they could assess client preferences. Which product characteristics are most important to the customer and what price brings the maximum profit. From Wilcox's 2003 p. 1 point of view, conjoint analysis gives answers to these most critical questions of marketing research. The conjoint analysis is a marketing research technique designed to help managers determine the value system of clients and potential customers. Wilcox 2003 p. 1. Introduced as a fundamental measurement method by the mathematical psychologists Luce and Tukey 1964 p. 1, more than forty years ago, conjoint analysis presents a combination of features in product profiles and asks people to rank or make a choice among of them. Finally, the results can be used for new product design, targeting, pricing, and market segmentation. Dolan 1990 p. 1. However, there arises the question: what is conjoint analysis really and why it has become so popular in contrast to other marketing research techniques. In order to answer these questions, section 2.1 defines the terms marketing and market research and outlines the contrast between them. Section 2.2 gives an overview of different Contemporary Marketing Research. Carl D. McDaniel, Roger Gates, Roger H. Gates, 1999. This text takes a strong managerial approach while maintaining its strong competitive coverage of quantitative methods. The new edition features extensive updates and revisions to pedagogy, content, supplements, and overall design. It also includes improved and extensive technology and Internet coverage and integrates technology both within the content in student exercises, activities, and special feature boxes and outside the text with an instructor/student web site to provide teaching and learning resources with a strong technology dimension.
