A Heroine of 1812: A Maryland Romance Amy E Blanchard, A warm evening in early June of the year 1812 showed the streets of Baltimore city gay with groups of people crowding the steps of the houses or sauntering up and down from corner to corner Slender girls with arms around each other circles of children merrily piping out some ring around a rosy young men stopping before this or that door for a few minutes chat all served to make a lively scene Lettice Hopkins in short waisted gown of sprigged muslin stood with one slippered foot tapping impatiently the marble step before her uncle s door Is yuh see him Miss Letty asked a little colored boy who stopped his occupation of sliding down the cellar door to make his inquiry No I don t Lettice returned petulantly and poor old Mrs Flynn is moaning and going on because her Patrick is aboard the vessel and she thinks he's drowned. Run to the corner Danny and see if there is a sign of your master. She sat down on the step and looked anxiously in the direction of the street corner toward which Danny was making his way taking time in doing so and stopping frequently to switch a chip from the running water in the gutter or to send a pebble hopping over the cobblestones. It certainly is warm for so early in June. Lettice remarked as she vigorously fanned herself. You'd do well to come out here. Aunt Martha she continued addressing some one in the hall behind her. There is a breath outside but little indoors. Don't you think uncle must be here soon. He surely cannot be at the wharf all this time. Perhaps he is. her aunt answered. It is a week since the vessel was due and in good weather that is too long. It is nothing of a run from here to Boston and back and your uncle has reason to be somewhat anxious especially in these days. These days Lettice repeated that is what father is always saying as if these were not good enough days. Mrs Hopkins did not answer but instead asked. Where is your father. Down at the Fountain Inn I suppose it is where he always goes of an evening. They have a deal to talk about it seems down there. They have indeed but isn't that your uncle coming now. Mrs Hopkins had come out upon the step and was peering out into the dimly lighted street. To be sure it is. Lettice replied. I will go to meet him for Mr Gilmore will stop him if I don't get him over on this side of the street. She started off with rapid step her light scarf floating from her shoulders as she walked.

The American, 1881 Heroes and Heroines of Fiction William S. Walsh, 1914 Desert Passions Hsu-Ming Teo, 2012-11-15. The Sheikh E. M. Hull's best selling novel that became a wildly popular film starring Rudolph Valentino kindled sheik fever across the Western world in the 1920s. A craze for all things romantically Oriental swept through fashion, film and literature spawning imitations and parodies without number. While that fervor has largely subsided, tales of passion between Western women and Arab men continue to enthrall readers of today's mass market romance novels. In this groundbreaking cultural history Hsu Ming Teo traces the literary lineage of these desert romances and historical bodice rippers from the twelfth to the twenty-first century and explores the gendered cultural and political purposes that they have served at various historical moments. Drawing on high literature, erotica and popular romance fiction and films Teo examines the changing meanings of Orientalist tropes such as crusades and conversion, abduction by Barbary pirates, sexual slavery, the fear of renegades, the Oriental despot and his harem, the figure of the powerful Western concubine and fantasies of escape from the harem. She analyzes the impact of imperialism, decolonization, sexual liberation, feminism and American involvement in the Middle East on women's Orientalist fiction. Teo suggests that the rise of female authored romance novels dramatically transformed the nature of Orientalism because it feminized the discourse, made white women central as producers, consumers and imagined actors and revised, reversed or collapsed the binaries inherent in traditional analyses of Orientalism.
