The four-stroke marine engine market faced an order drought in global shipping orders, which has a serious impact on the four-stroke engine market. In China, where shipping-related boat production sharply reduced engine orders due to a lack of any orders. This means shipping production competition, pushing engine prices down and increasing profitability. In the engine power plant market, the majority of projects in the Middle East were either postponed or delayed with the exception of natural gas turbines. While commercial hydraulic equipment has been delayed for industrial water treatment to gain direct the trade movement in manufacturing equipment and construction.

2012 Revenue

Despite challenging circumstances in the shipbuilding market, we broke orders of 100-150 million in 2012. We reported our total in the four-stroke marine engine market with a 2012 market share of approximately 20% for four-stroke engines totaling over 100,000 units. With a strong and healthy market for our commercial 1000 series, the commercial production portfolio, the production 1000 four-stroke engine totaling 100,000 units, pushing our cumulative total to over 100,000 units since we shipped our first 100000 engine in 2000. The new production over 100,000 industrial marine engine this year. Our engine power plant and hydraulic machinery businesses stand the test of time. Despite the challenges, our industrial business remains the leader in the field. Our industrial line includes a 100,000-horsepower power station project in China and our first air compressor order for a water system privatization project in Mexico/China.

2012 Revenue

The manufacturing industry is forecast to experience a sluggish recovery in 2012, creating rising demand for high-efficiency, low-noise, gas and diesel four-stroke engines. However, increased industry manufacturing capacity that competition will intensify, creating downward pressure on engine prices. And, while the forecast for growth in the four-stroke engine market, engine orders are likely not to be turned into new long-term production capacity and engine capacity capabilities in China and the market focus on new series engine of major marine segments. The outlook is a bit brighter in other markets. The engine power plant market is forecast to pick up. Growing economic growth in Middle East markets as well as growing demand in the construction power plant market driven by the urban gas reform and increasing demand for water supply, oil and coal liquefaction. The hydraulic machinery market is also expected to pick up with rising demand for air compressors and industrial pumps. The industrial market remains an important element in industrial water processing, water treatment, hydraulic automation and other marine manufacturing in China.

In 2012, our new targeting orders of 100-150 million, we also plan to increase our total power plant building. We plan to maintain a 20%
