

FALLIBILITY OF HUMAN MEMORY

This essay reviews on the aspect of fallibility of human memory through the instances of illusions and memory distortions of clients who have been administered memory recovery techniques to recover the instances of childhood sexual abuse. This topic is of interest to people from various fields of psychology to law from personal to society as a whole. In recent years, one of the most contentious and emotionally charged areas in which memory reliability is scrutinized is the recollection of childhood sexual abuse (Lindsay & Read, 1994). There have been instances where incautious use of memory recovery techniques has led to clients who were not victims of sexual abuse in their childhood create illusory beliefs that they were. Memory is the most crucial process in the cognition aspect as it allows human beings to store and retrieve information (Lindsay & Read, 1994). Memory as defined by some of the researchers and psychologists is complete and perfect requiring only proper cues to allow people to retrieve accurate records of the past experience. This view has also been established by the memory recovery therapists who mention that finding the trigger or retrieval cues will enable clients to recover past memories accurately which by far seemed to be out of reach. (Claridge, 1992: p. 243). Suggested 'triggers' include childhood pictures and memorabilia, bibliotherapy, films and videos (sometimes depicting sexual abuse; Dolan, 1991), guided imagery, hypnosis, age regression, dreamwork, bodywork, and group work with other survivors (Blume, 1990; Courtois, 1991; Maltz, 1990; Olio, 1989). Years of memory research and clinical practice have demonstrated that memories are not perfect representations of previous events and that remembering involves reconstructive processes akin to inference. (Bartlett, 1932; Bonnaroo, 1990; Freud, 1899/1962; Loftus and Loftus, 1980; Spence, 1984). It also emphasised that memory is a constructive, malleable, and also prone to errors and biases. The formation of memories is influenced by various factors, including emotions, social context, and the passage of time.

Autobiographical memory is the memory of an individual's personal history (Robinson, 1976). Piaget himself has been subjected to the error of autobiographical memory error wherein he described a vivid and elaborated incident where he had been kidnapped as a young child – an incident which never occurred. Famous writer Mark Twain also stated that “It isn't as astonishing the number of things I can remember, as the number of things I can

Transformations of Memory and Forgetting in Sixteenth-Century France Nicolas Russell, 2011-04-29 This book proposes that in a number of French Renaissance texts produced in varying contexts and genres we observe a shift in thinking about memory and forgetting Focusing on a corpus of texts by Marguerite de Navarre Pierre de Ronsard and Michel de Montaigne it explores several parallel transformations of and challenges to traditional discourses on the human faculty of memory Throughout Classical Antiquity and the Middle Ages a number of influential authors described memory as a powerful tool used to engage important human concerns such as spirituality knowledge politics and ethics This tradition had great esteem for memory and made great efforts to cultivate it in their pedagogical programs In the early sixteenth century this attitude toward memory started to be widely questioned The invention of the printing press and the early stages of the scientific revolution changed the intellectual landscape in ways that would make memory less important in intellectual endeavors Sixteenth century writers began to question the reliability and stability of memory They became wary of this mental faculty which they portrayed as stubbornly independent mysterious unruly and uncontrollable an attitude that became the norm in modern Western thought as is illustrated by the works of Descartes Locke Freud Proust Foucault and Nora for example Writing in this new intellectual landscape Marguerite de Navarre Ronsard and Montaigne describe memory not as a powerful tool of the intellect but rather as an uncontrollable mental faculty that mirrored the uncertainty of human life Their characterization of memory emerges from an engagement with a number of traditional ideas about memory Notwithstanding the great many differences in concerns of these writers and in the nature of their texts they react against or transform their classical and medieval models in similar ways They focus on memory's unruly side the ways that memory functions independently of the will They associate memory with the fluctuations of the body the organic soul rather than the stability of the mind the intellectual soul In their descriptions of memory these authors both reflect and contribute to a modern understanding of and attitude towards this mental faculty Published by University of Delaware Press Distributed worldwide by Rutgers University Press

Trauma and Memory Valerie Sinason, Ashley Conway, 2021-08-11 Trauma and Memory will assist mental health experts and professionals as well as the interested public in understanding the scientific issues around trauma memory and how this differs from other areas of memory This book provides accounts of the damage caused to psychology and survivors internationally by false memory groups and ideas It is unequivocally passionate about the truth of trauma memory and exposing the damaging disinformation that can seep into the field Contributors to this book include leading professionals from the field of criminology law psychology and psychotherapy in the UK and USA along with survivor professionals who understand only too well the damage such disinformation can cause This book is a valuable resource for mental health professionals of all disciplines including those involved with relevant law and public health policy It will also help survivors and survivor professionals in gaining insight into the forces resisting disclosure
