Providence Alaska Medical Centre is the most prominent hospital in Alaska with a capacity of 766 nurses, 371 beds, and more than 800 specialists. This hospital has specialized in various medical areas and boasts of a diverse range of surgical equipment. With its massive capacity, the hospital has been pragmatic in dividing its medical units. Age divides these units, for instance, pediatric and elderly care, surgeries, for example, the cardio department and even charity sectors. The facility has managed to serve the residents and also other foreigners. Since its establishment, a lot of progress has been made by the team. When it comes to elderly care, the hospital has managed to create a proactive system to control the current crisis in aged care and protection. Providence Alaska Medical Center is an anchorage of hope and treatment for all patients regardless of age, gender or type of illness.

The history of Providence Alaska healthcare dates back in 1902. This hospital was formed on the foundation of four mission sisters known as the “sisters of providence.” It was the culture of the mission sisters to travel across Alaska and other areas providing medical services to residents. The initial launching of the hospital was made possible by a priest who summoned the sisters to set a hospital in Nome, Alaska. This was after rumors that three gold nuggets were found in this area (Plunkett, 2015). With no structural government and community centers, the sisters thought a hospital would be beneficial to the society. In 1903, the sisters became innovative and would sell mini tickets to fund the development of the hospital. This was a strategic plan to gather enough finances to build a mission hospital in this area. The efforts finally bore fruits, and in 1906, the hospital had outgrown its current location. From this time on, the hospital continued to expand despite challenges of the constant wars. The strong foundation placed by the mission sisters has been maintained throughout the years (Strohmeyer, 2013).
