

Abstract

Background

While there has been considerable debate in the field, many different views have emerged about the importance of the social environment in the development of children's mental health. This paper reviews the literature on the role of the social environment in the development of children's mental health, with a particular focus on the role of the family.

Methods

A literature search was conducted using the following keywords: "social environment", "children's mental health", "family", "parenting", "child development", "mental health", "social support", "stress", "trauma", "resilience", "coping", "intervention", "prevention", "risk factors", "protective factors", "outcomes", "measurement", "methodology". The search was limited to English language peer-reviewed journal articles published between 1990 and 2010. The search was conducted using the following databases: PsycINFO, Medline, and ERIC. The search results were screened based on the following criteria: (1) relevance to the topic, (2) methodological quality, and (3) publication status. The search results were then organized into a table, with each row representing a different study. The table includes the following information: author(s), year, title, journal, and abstract.

Results

The search results identified 100 studies that met the inclusion criteria. The studies were organized into a table, with each row representing a different study.
