Abstract

The authors of the study, led by Dr. David A. Asch, a professor of psychology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, found that the majority of participants (75%) complied with the instructions to administer the shocks, even when the victim was in obvious pain. The researchers also found that the presence of a peer who refused to administer the shocks significantly reduced the number of participants who complied.

There is a growing body of research that suggests that the use of technology in the classroom can have a positive impact on student learning. This research is based on the idea that technology can provide students with access to a wide range of resources, including interactive learning materials, online courses, and virtual reality experiences. This research also suggests that technology can help to personalize learning, allowing students to learn at their own pace and in their own way. As a result, many educators are beginning to incorporate technology into their classrooms, and this trend is expected to continue in the future.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of elderly people. The study was conducted in a community center in a city in Iran. The participants were 30 elderly people (15 men and 15 women) aged 65 and above. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic exercises, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significant improvements in physical and psychological health compared to the control group. The experimental group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness, including aerobic capacity, muscle strength, and flexibility. They also had significantly lower levels of psychological stress and anxiety. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical and psychological health of elderly people.
