

Erosion and Sediment Control Measures

2.6 Sediment Traps and Soak Holes

Sediment traps and soak holes are small excavated structures that capture sediment-laden water, allow sediment to settle and then allow the water to either discharge or drain.

Sediment traps allow for the temporary storage of sediment laden water. They allow some of the larger sediment particle sizes to settle before the water is discharged.

Soak holes are constructed in porous soils (such as sand and pumice), allowing sediment laden water to soak into the soil. Sediment traps and soak holes are part of the family of water control techniques that can increase the life of the road, reduce maintenance costs, and mitigate potential sedimentation issues.
