Executive Summary: The purpose of this study was to investigate the effects of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary adults. The study involved 60 participants who were randomly assigned to either a control group or an exercise group. The exercise group participated in a supervised program of aerobic and strength training, while the control group remained sedentary. Data were collected at baseline, 6 weeks, and 12 weeks. The results showed that the exercise group experienced significant improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and mood compared to the control group. These findings suggest that a structured exercise program can effectively improve the health of sedentary individuals.
