The American Biology Teacher, 1996 Foundations of Macroecology Felisa A. Smith, John L. Gittleman, James H. Brown, 2014-08-22 Macroecology is an approach to science that emphasizes description and explanation of patterns and processes at large spatial and temporal scales Some liken it to seeing the forest through the trees an apt ecological use of the proverbial phrase The term itself was introduced to modern literature by our authors James Brown and Brian Maurer in a seminal science paper in 1989 We then published books by both of these authors including Brown's Macroecology in 1995 which quickly traveled to the shelf of classics in ecology credited with cohering and inspiring a subfield of ecology proper While macroecology is to many a modern subfield the large scale perspective it advocates is implicit in earlier publications For example in 1898 de Liocourt studied the influence of management practices on the structure of French fir forests and characterized the distribution of tree size in three different stands His findings that in natural areas the number of trees declined exponentially with increasing diameter of the trunk allowed him to draw conclusions about the influence of management practices on tree distribution patterns Similarly other classic macroecological patterns including the species area relationship latitudinal gradient of species richness relationship between body size and metabolic rate species abundance distribution and species body size distribution were identified decades sometimes even centuries ago Consequently despite the scant twenty years that has elapsed since the term was coined macroecology has a deep and rich history Foundations of Macroecology traces and coheres that history charting an evolutionary trajectory to the rigorous macroecological research landscape science enjoys today The forty six papers span eight decades from 1920 to 1998 and include divergent perspectives of space time and taxonomic and habitat affiliation They are organized into two main parts Macroecology before Macroecology and Dimensions of Macroecology The latter is further subdivided into six sections reflecting the subject matter Allometry and Body Size Evolutionary Dynamics Abundance and Distributions Species Diversity and Methodological Advances For each reprinted paper a macroecologist specializing in that area has written original commentary that places the paper in a broader context and explains why it is foundational Science Spectrum Holt Rinehart & Winston, Holt, Rinehart and Winston Staff, 2003-03 The Software Encyclopedia, 1988 The Horn Book Guide to Children's and Young Adult Books, 1999 Index Medicus, 2004 Vols for 1963 include as pt 2 of the Jan issue Medical subject headings
