JANUARY 1998

1. Section 1: Introduction
 This document is a report on the results of the survey conducted in the year 2000. The survey was conducted in order to determine the level of awareness of the general public regarding the importance of environmental protection. The survey was conducted in a random sample of 1000 people living in the city of New York. The results of the survey are presented in the following sections.

2. Section 2: Methodology
 The survey was conducted using a random sample of 1000 people living in the city of New York. The sample was selected using a random digit dialing method. The survey was conducted by telephone. The questions were asked by a trained interviewer. The responses were recorded by the interviewer. The data was then analyzed using statistical methods.

3. Section 3: Results
 The results of the survey are presented in the following table. The table shows the percentage of respondents who answered each question correctly. The questions were asked in order of increasing difficulty. The results show that the majority of respondents were able to answer the questions correctly. This indicates that the general public has a good understanding of the importance of environmental protection.

4. Section 4: Conclusion
 The results of the survey indicate that the general public has a good understanding of the importance of environmental protection. This suggests that there is no need for further education or training in this area. However, it is important to continue to monitor the level of awareness of the general public in order to ensure that it remains high.

5. Section 5: Appendix
 The appendix contains the full list of questions asked during the survey. It also contains the full list of responses given by the respondents. This information is provided for reference purposes only.
