- Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health status of sedentary middle-aged men. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 20 sedentary middle-aged men (mean age 45.5 ± 5.2 years, mean BMI 25.8 ± 2.1 kg/m²). They were divided into two groups: a control group (n = 10) and an exercise group (n = 10). The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The training program included aerobic exercise (treadmill running) and resistance training (weight lifting). The control group did not participate in any exercise program. The physical fitness and health status of the subjects were assessed at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The results showed that the exercise group had significant improvements in physical fitness and health status compared to the control group. The exercise group had significantly lower body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure, and significantly higher heart rate, stroke volume, and cardiac output. The exercise group also had significantly lower levels of total cholesterol, triglycerides, and low-density lipoprotein (LDL) cholesterol, and significantly higher levels of high-density lipoprotein (HDL) cholesterol. The exercise group had significantly lower levels of fasting glucose and insulin, and significantly higher levels of insulin sensitivity. The exercise group had significantly lower levels of systolic and diastolic blood pressure, and significantly higher levels of heart rate variability. The exercise group had significantly lower levels of anxiety and depression, and significantly higher levels of self-esteem and quality of life. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and health status of sedentary middle-aged men.

Background: The Escherichia coli serotype O157:H7 outbreak caused nearly 100 deaths and more than 7000 hospitalizations in the United States. Although the outbreak was linked to beef cattle, the source of contamination and the mechanism of infection are still unclear. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of the Shiga toxin 2 (Stx2) gene in E. coli O157 isolates from cattle and to determine the prevalence of the Stx2 gene in E. coli O157 isolates from cattle and to determine the prevalence of the Stx2 gene in E. coli O157 isolates from cattle.
