These results are consistent with the hypothesis that the effect of the intervention on the use of evidence in decision-making is not a simple function of the intervention itself, but is also a function of the individual's characteristics and the context in which the intervention is implemented. The results also suggest that the effect of the intervention on the use of evidence in decision-making is not a simple function of the intervention itself, but is also a function of the individual's characteristics and the context in which the intervention is implemented.
