Abstract. This research aims to develop a mentoring model and optimize the use of an E-Clinic Research System to help students overcome obstacles in compiling their scientific papers for their master's thesis. The study uses a quantitative approach and action research with three main stages: planning, implementation, and evaluation. The model assistance consists of analyzing participants' condition, making performance indicators, providing intensive assistance, conducting intensive assistance, and monitoring. The results indicate that the mentoring model is effective, producing scientific papers in various forms, including publications, scientific works, and draft scientific papers. The findings imply that the implementation of the mentoring model and E-Clinic Research System can significantly increase the efficiency and effectiveness of student and supervisor interaction in producing scientific work.

1 Introduction

College graduates according to their level are required to meet the specified qualifications. In accordance with the existing provisions in structuring the quality of higher education based on the leveling of graduate qualifications with the keywords there is a Specific Skill Formulation. At the Master's level or level 8, graduates must have the ability at level 8, namely developing science and technology through research, innovation and testing, solving problems with a multi-disciplinary approach. At level 8, a master's degree graduate has the obligation to carry out publications. In accordance with the Minister of Education and Culture Number 49 of 2014, it has revised that a master's graduate must compile a thesis or other equivalent form and upload it on the college website, as well as make scientific papers that are published in accredited scientific journals or accepted in international journals.
