How To Paint A Dead Man:

How to Paint a Dead Man Sarah Hall, 2009-08-19 Hall's writing manages to combine acute sensitivity and daring visceral and engaging. The emotional lives of her characters are skillfully realized in this bright weave of disparate voices for whom art is at once a way of seeing and a way of life. The Times London. The lives of four individuals: a dying painter, a blind girl, a landscape artist, and an art curator intertwine across nearly five decades in this luminous and searching novel of extraordinary power. With How to Paint a Dead Man Sarah Hall, one of the most significant and exciting of Britain's young novelists, The Guardian delivers a maddeningly enticing read, an amazing feat of literary engineering. The Independent on Sunday. How to Paint a Dead Man Sarah Hall, 2010. Longlisted for the Man Booker Prize 2009, a luminous and searching novel from the author of the Booker shortlisted The Electric Michelangelo. How to Paint a Dead Man Harry Bauld, 2020-11-13. A lyric leap forward from Harry Bauld's playful and passionate debut The Uncorrected Eye. How to Paint a Dead Man peers so intensely at art that the verse becomes somehow both hallucinatory and colloquial at the same time. The new collection leaves aside the formal dance of some of the earlier work but extends the vivid and often comic explorations of art and the American vernacular. With no lack of pathos and sudden jazzy riffs, many of these poems vamp on artists from Renaissance how to author Cennino Cennini through Canaletto, Rembrandt, Magritte, the German Expressionists, and Picasso, often through dramatic monologues. Bauld also pitches playfully through fellow writers Mark Strand and Joyce Kilmer among others to tap into the turbulent spirit of the moment. Always now it seems we look at art and it looks back at us on trial as he writes in The Eyes. One figure that looms large here belongs to 80's avatar Jean Michel Basquiat, the former street graffiti artist who shot to world wide fame and died of a drug overdose at twenty seven. Bauld, who spends part of the year in the Basque country and has written previously about that region's complex history, is oddly sensitive to the seemingly merely linguistic tie between Basque and Basquiat. It's the voice of a Basquiat angel in Annunciation who says "You already gave birth to this flame, you don't know the name of The painted dead man of the title takes on many identities: not only the poet's father but Basquiat, Mark Strand, the victims of a mass shooting, and the shooter himself, as well as each of the artists evoked, having passed ironically under Bauld's gaze from observer to observed, painter to model, creator to subject. Art is always saying hello and poetry is always saying goodbye." reads the Kenneth Koch inscription to the book's opening poem, the punning and satirical list Duals in the Old West. "The sun is always saying shut up and the moon is always whispering tell me more." But Bauld sets out not just to burlesque and blur but to erase these teasing but finally facile dualities. This is a collection that displays, explores, and ultimately fuses all sorts of opposition: fame and obscurity, serenity and violence, inner and outer experience, what's real and what's imagined. One expects no less from a poet whose own name is an oxymoron. Still floating above the undercurrent of death, haunted discontent, and loss is also a delight, the hello of art in Bauld's case verbal as well as visual in the face of elegy's traditional goodbye. It's what you do after you go down that counts, he writes in Self Portrait as

Marco Polo as Miles Davis about the floored boxer Jack Johnson the first black heavyweight champion And in Cadillac Moon with a sidelong swipe at our current political scene the poet observes a Basquiat rendering of a car a set of fantasy wheels that play like four square in the hands of children who like the seven artists who will save us plow their fingers in paint furrows to change all the colors of today s sky rub out the authoritarian moon and everything under it making a holy mess and moving on Tense with the heightened contemporary sounds Bauld discovers in the paintings of the past How To Paint a Dead Man makes its own holy mess and moves on Dead Man's Rock Arthur Quiller-Couch,1900 Dead Man Living Ira R.
