Effects of Oil on a Tundra Pond J. E. Hobbie, United States. Energy Research and Development Administration, Marine Biological Laboratory (Woods Hole, Mass.), 1978 Effects of Oil on a Tundra Pond. Final Report, 1978 A three year study of two spills in tundra ponds at Barrow showed that oil has a highly specific impact on the benthos Instead of a toxic effect on the entire community as occurred with the crustacean zooplankton certain insect species inhabiting the vegetated margins of the ponds were eliminated Physical entrapment by the floating oil slick or the film coating stems of emergent sedges and grasses appeared to cause this mortality and species specific behaviors may be responsible for the observed selectivity Recovery of affected populations may take years due to the long life cycles of arctic insects and the poor dispersal capabilities of many arctic species Large scale spills covering many contiguous lakes and ponds could have especially long lasting impacts
