

TO REMOVE or service the control valve, close the block valve and depressurize or equalize the piping upstream using the bleed valve, depending on whether the process operates at a positive or negative pressure. Lock and tag the valves to prevent use while servicing them.

A second block and bleed configuration may also be required on the downstream side of the control valve if the process line downstream of the control valve is also under pressure.

Single Block and Bleed with Bypass

A modification of the single block and bleed configuration is to add a bypass valve to isolate the control valve, while at the same time provide manual control of the process fluid using a bypass valve (Figure 19).

This new expanded edition of the Handbook of Ethological Methods provides a complete step-by-step introduction to ethological methods, from topic choice and behavioral description to data collection and statistical analysis.
