

Step 6 If the red stain was visible in the cut section, another 5mm section was cut and the process repeated until no red stain was visible in the cut section. This allowed the student to estimate how far the red stain had moved up the celery stalk.

Step 7 Steps 4 to 6 were repeated for the celery stalk which had been in the cool red stain.

(a) (i) State one safety precaution that should be taken while carrying out this method.

Wear gloves and goggles to avoid stain on body.

[1]

(ii) The student's results are shown in Fig. 1.4.

- number of 5mm sections cut from the celery stalk in warm red stain = 11 number of 5mm sections cut from the celery stalk in cool red stain = 5

Prepare a table and record your results in your book, in the space provided. You may choose to include:

- the temperature (cool or warm) of the red stain
- the number of sections that were stained in 10 minutes
- the total distance moved by the red stain in 10 minutes.

temperature	number of sections that were stained	total distance moved by red stain (mm)
warm	11	55
cool	5	25

[2]

(b) Use the data to calculate the rate of movement of the red stain in the celery stalk at each temperature.

Space for working

warm mm per minute

cool mm per minute

[2]

(a) State a conclusion for these results.

The higher the temperature, the further the stain moves.

[1]

(b) State two variables which were kept constant in this experiment.

Length of celery stalk.
Time in stain.

(c) One way of improving the method used in this investigation would be to repeat it a number of times.

Identify two other sources of error in this investigation.

For each error, suggest an improvement to minimise the effect of the error.

Temperature might change.
Use thermostatically controlled water-baths to maintain temperature.

5mm sections were too big to give precise results.

Improvement: Cut thinner sections.
