

VII. ADJUSTMENT PROCEDURE

Note: Before adjusting the trigger you should consider some means to prevent the hammer from striking the lower receiver forward of the hammer to prevent damage to the receiver.

1. First stage pull weight

- Ensure that the long leg of the trigger return spring is captured by the second or third notch in the adjustment plate.
- Pull the trigger back just far enough to detect rearward movement until the trigger returns fully forward. This is the minimum pull weight of the first stage (about one pound).
- First stage pull weight may be increased by moving the spring leg to a more rearward notch in the adjustment plate to the desired weight of pull (maximum about 3 1/2 lbs).

2. Second stage sear engagement

This is a true two stage design in that full trigger sear engagement is present until final release. Pull trigger until resistance is felt, then continue pull until hammer release. The difference in trigger travel felt is second stage sear engagement. That travel (engagement) may be increased or decreased by turning adjustment screw 12. Turning the screw in (clockwise) will reduce sear engagement, out (counter-clockwise) will increase sear engagement. Set to preference.

3. Second stage weight of pull

Note: The first stage pull and second stage pull are accumulative ($1 + 2 = \text{total}$) Turn screw 11 in (clockwise) to increase weight of pull, turn out (counter-clockwise) to decrease weight of pull. Set to preference.

4. Overtravel Adjustment (Not Shown)

Note: The over-travel screw is set to minimum when received to facilitate the initial settings of stage one and stage two. It is located on the forward right hand side of the trigger.

A. Cock the hammer

- Turn the over-travel screw in (clockwise) until pulling of the trigger will not allow hammer fall with the trigger fully pulled.
- While continuing to keep pull pressure on the trigger, turn the over-travel screw (counter-clockwise) until the hammer falls.
- The hammer will not fall completely to the full fire position. It will be stopped by the trigger at 14-15.
- Continue to turn the over-travel screw out until the hammer falls totally forward. Turn screw out an additional 1/4 turn. This is minimum over-travel setting.

5. Safety Operation

Note: The safety cannot be engaged or reinstalled with the hammer forward. This prevents damage to trigger parts when recocking the hammer.

- Cock the hammer and reinstall the safety lever/cam.
- Place the safety lever to "fire" and ensure that the hammer falls completely.
- Place the safety lever to "safe" and ensure that total trigger pull will not allow the hammer to fall.
- Reinstall the safety plunger, its spring, and the pistol grip.

Finally: Exercise caution and good judgement, and enjoy. Thank you for choosing our product!
